Hi Paul,

Many thanks for your prompt reply.

On paper it looks like an obvious difference, however in practice the dark colour of the frames, the scale of the façade and 'security-in-numbers' gives an overall impression of uniformity and makes them very difficult to pick out unless one was trying to spot the difference. Due to differences In the brick openings etc there are even small differences between existing windows which haven't been changed.

Please see attached photos. (NB: the contractor took the step of installation in advance having carried out their own in-house assessments). As the works aren't yet complete there are still some items to be 'snagged' but hopefully you can agree the overall impression is successful.

Kind regards,

Paul

Coronavirus (COVID-19): Message to Stephenson Studio clients and colleagues

For the protection and welfare of our clients, colleagues and staff, we confirm that our Manchester studio are now working remotely until Government Guidelines confirm we are able to return.
We have systems in place to allow us to service our clients and projects without interruption with communication via mobile telephone, email, conference call and video/Microsoft Teams as usual.
During this unprecedented period, our office landlines can only be serviced by a single pick up via an answering machine service, therefore may at times register as engaged, we apologise for this.
In the best interests of the office, and if you need to communicate to our staff regarding a project, please do this through email, or Microsoft teams.
Many thanks
