sustainable development officers, street management, environmental health, planners and Manchester waste contractors. Feedback from developers and architects has also been incorporated to ensure that the guidance is useable and useful for all parties.

Who should use the guidance?
Waste Storage and Collection guidance should be used by planners, developers, architects, building managers and other parties involved in the design of buildings and the management of waste from them.

When should the Waste Storage and Collection Guidance be used?
The guidance should be used from the earliest stages of building design. Designing in adequately sized bin storage areas, access for collection crews and vehicles and other aspects of waste management are difficult to apply retrospectively. The recommendations are integral to the design of a building and provide information that is useful for building designers and assures planning officers that a suitable waste management strategy has been developed.

A waste management strategy should be included as part of the Environmental Standards Statement.
