Hi Angela,

The perforated infill panels are folded so that the fixing are through the (recessed) balustrade uprights only - fixings are not visible from the outside.

Please find attached photos showing bolt fixings from the stair side, and also some views from outside of the stair. The perforations are framed within a narrow solid margin in each panel. The panels themselves are framed by shadow gaps formed by recessed balustrade uprights.

The contractor has singularly proceeded with the installation due to difficult programmatic constraints, however we trust that you can agree that the result is successful and sufficiently high quality in execution. MIO paint decoration works are obviously yet to be complete, to all stringers and soffits etc.

Best regards,

Paul

Coronavirus (COVID-19): Message to Stephenson Studio clients and colleagues

For the protection and welfare of our clients, colleagues and staff, we confirm that our Manchester studio are now working remotely until Government Guidelines confirm we are able to return. We have systems in place to allow us to service our clients and projects without interruption with communication via mobile telephone, email, conference call and video/Microsoft Teams as usual. During this unprecedented period, our office landlines can only be serviced by a single pick up via an answering machine service, therefore may at times register as engaged, we apologise for this. In the best interests of the office, and if you need to communicate to our staff regarding a project, please do this through email, or Microsoft teams.

Many thanks
