Hi Nicola

Apologies for the delay in responding.

Having carefully considered the issue relating to the decay pocket on the major lateral limb I have reconsidered my original specification and I am now advising that the complete limb should be removed. Whilst this is not ideal due to the size of the wound, I think it is inevitable that the decay will probably continue in the affected area so we may be taking an unnecessary risk. The crown should be balanced on the opposite side by reducing the extending limb over the garden to the rear by approximately 4m to a good growing point. All works should be carried out in accordance with BS 3998 by a suitably qualified person.
