Comment Reasons:

Comment: This site has high local biodiversity and habitat value. It provides home and forage for many more species than the adjacent park and should be managed to maximise this.

Rewilding is a burgeoning academic subject (see UoM's new MSc Nature Recovery, Restoration and Rewilding for example) and having a resource for studying and developing that subject would greatly help with its development.

There is strong, decade's long local interest in this site including many people from specialist conservation and nature management professions. Forming a cohort of local people to help with long-term site management and for accessing community-targeted national funding would be relatively simple. Let us take care of this place which means so much to us.
