Comment Reasons:

Comment: It would destroy the integrity of this artwork and listed 'building' to remove a chunk of it and relocate it to a space which will not be freely accessible to the public as it is now. What is the point of the listing status if not to protect structures from destructive 'development' such as this? How much 20th century built heritage will be left before planning authorities wake up to the idea that post-war architecture has historical value? I urge you to reject this proposal, honour the listing and preserve a unique public artwork that marries form and function and is diminished by removal from its intended context.
