Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?
The officer dealing with the planning application and other planning staff. Remember, anyone, including the person applying for planning permission, is entitled to read your comments. If the application is to be decided by a committee (elected members of the City Council), your views and others will be summarised in a written report, available for public inspection a few days before the Committee meets.

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.

Who can comment on planning applications?
Anyone, but comments must be made in writing. Anonymous comments are not accepted.

Who is notified?
As a general rule those immediately adjacent to the development. We usually send out individual letters (like this one) although sometimes, notices are also put up near the site or in newspapers.

Who looks at my response?

Will my views make any difference to the decision?
They might – the Council has a legal duty to consider the views of the public, but your views must be relevant to planning.

How do I know what's "relevant to planning"?
Planning is mainly concerned with the physical aspects of the way land and buildings are used. Issues such as levels of activity, appearance, parking, noise, traffic or overlooking are relevant. Examples of issues which are not relevant include: effect on property values or fears of commercial competition. If it wants to refuse planning permission, the Council has to be able to show that some harm will result. The guide on the website provides more information about this.

Can I appeal if I don't like the decision?
No. Only the person who makes the application can appeal (to the Secretary of State).

Can I complain if I don't like the way I've been treated?
Yes. The Council has a complaints process and details about how to complain are available online at www.manchester.gov.uk/complaints. We always aim to deal with complaints quickly.
